New York Losing Its Places of Historic Interest.

House in Which Daniel Webster Was Born Still Stands—Long Island.

Rose windows began rising a few days ago the old building on lower Broadway in which Daniel Webster was born 60 years ago, relates the New York Times. It is at 12 Broadway, opposite Bowling Green, and adjoins the ancient Stevens house which was one of the prettiest houses in the city half a century ago.

With the house so intimately associated with the name of Webster, other houses adjoining on the south are also being torn down. These massive landmarks are being sacrificed to the needs of the Broadway subway, which extends from Bowling Green to Morris street, and to the newer and prettier old brick buildings on the Government street corner across town. It was thought at one time that the Stevens house would also be demolished, but as the subway does not go under the immediate corner that old brick building originally erected by Dickinson's Drovers' Hotel, will probably be left as a reminder of former Broadway before the days of the skyscraper structures.

The house in which Daniel Webster was born has also been known as the house of the lion. For about a few days ago two massive lions stood on granite bases at the entrance steps. It is said that they were placed there about seventy years ago when the building was used as the office of the British census general. When the census commissioners got possession of the houses the lions were the first things taken away. They have gone to Long Island to be placed on the lawn of the summer home of one of the contractors.

Daniel Webster was married in the house on December 14, 1802. It was his second marriage, and his bride was Caroline Le Roy, daughter of Herman Le Roy, one of the wealthy merchants of the period, who resided in the house for many years. It has also been stated that Henry Ward Beecher was married there.

The four houses being torn down are the oldest Broadway buildings south of City Hall park. They antedate by many years the more archaic appearing Stevens house, on the Morris street corner. This building looks as if it might be a century old, and more than one local historian has ascribed to it an age exceeding 100 years.

The building was erected in 1845 for Domenico, whose popular restaurant was near by in William street. In June, 1846, the building was opened as Domenico's hotel. It was a bachelors' hotel and the pioneer of its kind in the city. The proprietors advertised rooms at from $10 to $60 a month—a radical contrast to the prices paid today in a place of corresponding elegance. Domenico's remained there about ten years, and then moved to the Irving house, on the northwest corner of Broadway and Chambers street. The lower Broadway building was removed and saved the Stevens house to serve as a model of the famous Stevens engineering family who lived in the house, a few doors above, and until long after the Civil war the Stevens house had a worthy place among the houses of the city.

The result of the demolition of these Broadway houses will be the elimination of the crooked building line which for many years has been a characteristic of this block. The front of every house from the Bowling Green building up to Morris street has overlapped the one below, and this peculiarity is clearly seen in the Stevens house where the main corner building just several feet beyond the portion which was added several years later. It is said that this peculiarity dates from an old city ordinance of 1764 which permitted the residents considerable freedom in establishing the fronts of their houses in that block.

The common council in 1765 rescinded the earlier ordinance, endeavoring to establish a straight building line, but it is easy to see that no attention was paid to this order of colonial days—New York Times.

Presenting Presidents' Buttons.

The year of being posted alive always has been, and is, an widespread that the French Academy of Science some years ago offered a prize equal to $7,500 for the discovery of some means or which even the inexperienced might at once determine whether, in a given case, death and disease or not. A physician obtained the prize. He had observed the following well-known signs. If one hand of the suspected dead person is held towards a candle or other artificial light, with the fingers extended and one touching the other, and one hand through the spaces between the fingers towards the light, there appears a blushing red color where the fingers touch each other, due to the blood still circulating; it shows itself through the fingers which have not yet congealed. When life is entirely extinct, the phenomenon of parted spaces between the fingers at once ceases. The most extensive and thorough trials established the truth of his observation.

Little Lemont—Say, say, what is the difference between an optimist and a pessimist?

Paw—An optimist, and a man who is happy when he is miserable, and a pessimist is a man who is miserable when he is happy.

One of Several.

Little Lemont—Say, say, is that a wild man across the street?

Paw—Something like that son. He is a member of the state legislature who voted against free lunch, and today he had to give up real money for the food he consumed between drinks.

OUR COAST DEFENSE

In these modern days of great armament and scientific war equipment, much thought has been given to our coast defense. The question of protection is one that concerns all patriotic Americans for it affects the safety and welfare of our country.

This is also true in matters pertaining to Alaska. That great mass of mountainous territory—now sprung to importance since the days of the Klondike gold rush—has been a characteristic of this block. The front of every house from the Bowling Green building up to Morris street has overlapped the one below, and this peculiarity is clearly seen in the Stevens house where the main corner building just several feet beyond the portion which was added several years later. It is said that this peculiarity dates from an old city ordinance of 1764 which permitted the residents considerable freedom in establishing the fronts of their houses in that block.

Governor Knows What He Was Doing When He Told Anecdote of Ancient Vintage.

The governor of a southern state came to his office with a friend one morning to find a number of men waiting in the afternoon. Pending an instant, he told a story that was a decided "cheat." When he got inside the private office the friend said: "That was a horribly bad one you sprung on those fellows."

"I know it," chuckled the governor, "but did you notice that one that laughed?"

"Well, I noticed that three or four did."

"Those," said the governor, "are the fellow who won't let us in to see me. They are the ones who have favors to ask."—Richmond Sunday Herald.

His First Sweetheart.

Her name is Milly. I haven't said anything about marrying her yet—not to her or anybody—but I've carried her books three or four times and I hit her in the back of the head with a soft snowball, and I guess she likes me too. She threw a snowball back at me when I hit her and then, when I washed her face for her with snow, she just said: "Oh, George, you mean thing" as if she might be willing to marry me sometime if I got nerve enough to ask her when we're grown up. I wonder how a fellow gets nerve to ask them. I don't think I'll ever have.—Ella Parker Butler, in the American Magazine.

Just That.

"The Germans are going to mobilize the elephants in a menagerie for heavy work. That's new line, isn't it?"

Quite so; a sort of trunk line."

All Promised.

He—Can't you spare me a kiss?

She—You'll have to ask Fred; I've promised them all to him.

Timely Tips.

If you wish to make a rissole, first prepare the mince. Then heat it in a good, thick brown or white sauce, according to the color of the meat you use, and be very careful about the seasoning, which may consist of pepper, salt, celery salt, cayenne, parsley, finely grated lemon peel, mushroom cetchup, and (if you are using chicken or game) a little ham or bacon.

Warm the well-flavored mince in well-flavored sauce and see that the mixture is of the thickness of porridge. Then turn it on to a dish and let it become cold. When cold it will stiffen a little more, and with well-floured hands you can form it into the shape you prefer. Have ready a beaten egg yolk, and brush over, and roll in fine crumbs. Then fry, drain, and serve very hot.

To Wash Comforters.

Make a nice warm soapuds in bathtub. Put comforter in. Take scrubbing brush and scrub soiled ends, using washboard to scrub on. After soaking and stamping, let water off and drain, then fill the tub with clean water and rinse. Let the water off and drain. Don't try to wring. Put on line; when almost dry beat with carpet beater. It will be as light and fluffy as new and no muss to clean up.

Onion on Toast.

Take half of a large sweet onion, slice very thin, put in frying pan with butter, season with salt and pepper. Cover and let stew slowly for ten or fifteen minutes, then remove cover and let brown. Thicken with flour and milk as for meat gravy. Pour over hot slices of toasted bread.

English Monkey.

One cupful cheese cut in small pieces, one cupful bread crumbs which have been soaked in one cupful sweet milk, one egg beaten light, one-half teaspoonful salt, dash cayenne, pinch soda, one tablespoonful butter; cook five minutes. Serve on toast or crackers.

Corn and Tomatoes.

Fist one tablespoonful of butter in skillet, turn in one pint of tomatoes; simmer five minutes; add one pint of canned corn, pepper, salt, paprika and one tablespoonful of finely-minced green pepper.
